POSTAL REGULATORY COMMISSION
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Dear Commission Chairman Goldway,

I am writing in opposition to the Postal Service proposal ending carrier street address delivery, collection at blue collection boxes, and incoming mail processing on Saturdays in the United States and I would like my letter to be part of the informal public opinion record of the Postal Regulatory Commission.

There is no doubt that today's technological advances have brought a decrease in paper mail and postal service use has significantly declined. Even with electronic letter possibilities, however, there is still a need for all current mail services, particularly in rural America where modern technological opportunities are not prevalent or, in some cases, not even available. In some parts of this country, the U.S. mail system is still the most common means of communication. Until rural America is offered affordable electronic and telecommunication services such as access to high-speed internet and wireless telephone, it would be devastating to decrease postal services. In my opinion, reducing these services would be a significant setback for our rural citizens to properly communicate with the rest of the world, and I believe that businesses and U.S. citizens in rural areas will greatly suffer without today's efficient mail system including all of the postal services now available.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,

David DeJoy Simon

P.S. DeJoy has to go!
